FFA Members Recognized for Farm Projects

Student members of Lexington-Richland School District Five FFA have been busy with an innovative project aimed at getting more local foods into school cafeterias. Since receiving a grant from USDA in 2013, the students have built 20 raised garden beds, created bird houses, built menu boards for the school cafeterias and made compost bins for all eight schools in the district. The FFA chapter will also help grow vegetables in a new greenhouse at the Center for Advance Technical Studies.

"These students have definitely taken the initiative on these projects," said District Five Student Nutrition Director Todd A. Bedenbaugh. "Our FFA chapter is always looking for good projects to help our district, and we're grateful they chose to partner with us to promote Farm to Five."

The students were recognized on Feb. 4 for their work with the Farm to Five program. "We wanted to spotlight them with a lunch of all locally grown products and have W. P. Rawl and the Department of Ag come out to talk to them about growing produce," Bedenbaugh said. "They've done amazing work."

The Farm to Table luncheon included barbecued chicken from Gentry's Poultry, collards from W.P. Rawl, golden wild rice from Carolina Plantation, sweet potatoes from Gallop Farms, pecan torte made with pecans from Young Plantation, and sweet tea from Carolina Select Tea.

One of the projects that the FFA Chapter has planned would utilize The Center's new greenhouse, which is in the final stages of construction. The students plan to grow broccoli and other vegetables that will be served in school cafeterias throughout the district.

"Local ingredients mean a better product for the consumer, and we think it's great that the students are learning how to grow their own vegetables and learning a little bit more about our farm, which is right in their back yard," said Matt Warren, Agricultural Food Safety Specialist at W. P. Rawl. "Today we wanted them to learn a little bit about our operations and that there are careers in agriculture."

District Five was awarded a nearly $100,000 Farm to School grant by the U.S. Department of Agriculture during the 2013-2014 school year. Dubbed the "Farm to Five" program, the grant provides for educational opportunities for students and teachers while using more local foods in district cafeterias.

"They are our future agricultural leaders," said Ansley Turnblad, coordinator for the S.C. Department of Agriculture's Certified SC program. "Whether or not they decide to go into farming, it's important for all students to know about agriculture because we're all going to eat. So, agriculture is always going to play an important role in the clothes we wear and the food we eat. We all need agriculture to survive."

Students in District Five are using the Farm to School grant over two years to expand local food offerings, encourage other students to eat locally grown produce, and support nutrition education efforts.

Numbers Tell the Story

We introduced our "50 by 20" plan in 2009, the goal being to see the economic impact of agriculture rise to $50 billion by 2020, and a recent update of the original study indicates that we are closer than anyone thought possible. The study commissioned by the Palmetto Agribusiness Council, Farm Bureau, Clemson, and our department shows that agriculture and forestry now have an annual economic impact of $41.7 billion. The original measurement in 2008 was just under $34 billion.

The figures were recently released in a joint news conference with Gov. Nikki Haley. She called the growth, "a real reason to celebrate." My remarks at the press conference focused on our progress and our potential. Since these are new figures, we want to share them with you.

Agriculture and forestry together make up the state's largest industry. Food, fiber, and forest products are essential to every citizen in South Carolina. Our combined industry of agribusiness is the No. 1 economic driver in South Carolina, representing 212,530 jobs.

It's great to see this growth in jobs and dollars generated in our economy. Agriculture and forestry are so important in our state. From rural areas to upscale restaurants, strawberry patches to peanut processing plants, cotton farmers to flower festivals, our lifestyle revolves around agriculture.

USDA Hosts Rural Energy for America Grant Workshops

USDA Rural Development is offering agricultural producers and rural small businesses in South Carolina the opportunity to reduce their energy consumption with the assistance of the Rural Energy for America Program (REAP). Rural Development will be holding the two remaining grant workshops on March 10 & 12 to discuss REAP and to provide application assistance. For locations, please visit our website: <http://www.rd.usda.gov/sc> or contact Marlous Black; Richland; 803-765-5160.

IN 2013

- Cash receipts for ag commodities are up 54 percent since 2006.

- Our total economic impact has increased 23 percent since 2006.

- Agribusiness is responsible for 9.1 percent of the economic activity in S.C.

- Our ag exports totaled $948 million in 2012, up 156 percent from exports in 2000.

- Livestock and poultry increased 51.6 percent and crops increased 53 percent.

- The Top Five Commodities in S.C. include broilers, turkeys, corn, cotton, and greenhouse/nursery.

Our ongoing plan for growth is focused on four areas: continued agribusiness development, expansion of existing industries, developing new crops and technology, and expanding marketing opportunities.

Helping small farmers is a top priority, and we are so pleased that our fruit and vegetable growers have increased sales. We will continue to develop programs to help small farms. As we like to say, "All large farms started as small farms." Also, small farms are the real backbone of production agriculture, making up well over 80 percent of the farms operating in our state.

Our Certified South Carolina marketing program has been an important factor in the growth we've seen. Nearly 70 percent of our consumers recognize the Certified SC logo, which ensures them of fresh, local foods. We will continue to look for innovative and effective ways to market our state's products. Our number of partners using the programs continues to grow and our research tells us that they are investing their own dollars because they know it has helped their business.

As we look toward the future, we are well positioned to reach our goal of $50 billion by year 2020. But, it certainly won't just happen without the leadership in South Carolina agriculture working together on all fronts.

If we make our goal, I suppose we'll celebrate a victory, and then we'll set new goals—always striving to keep agriculture and agribusiness as a top priority in our state.

Pelion Seniors Build Businesses before Graduation

Between 5:30 and 6 each morning, Brandon Myers climbs out of bed and gets straight to work. As the owner of Southern Fresh Farms, LLC, the Pelion High senior's routine is always the same - feed the chickens, collect eggs, eat breakfast and then head to school.

Myers repeats the same process of feeding the chickens and collecting eggs most afternoons, and he doesn't mind the demanding schedule. "I was taught at a young age that hard work will get you anywhere you want to go," says Myers.

Brandon Myers

And, it does. In 2012, Myers, a Lexington County School District One student, started his agribusiness. The idea came about during an agriculture science class at the Center for Advanced Agribusiness Research at Pelion High.

The business initially consisted of four hens, but Myers had a bigger goal in mind. He researched what it would take to sell eggs to local stores and the community. That's when he realized he would need more money.

Myers applied for and received a loan through the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Farm Service Agency. The $2,500 loan covered his startup costs including 40 layers, a chicken house and feed. He built the operation in his back yard.

By 2014, Myers again expanded with an additional FSA loan. He added 500 chickens and two additional chicken houses. Now early projections show he could gross $30,000.

Pelion High School Agricultural Education Instructor and FFA Adviser Frank Stover is Myer's business advisor. "My biggest advice was to start small and expand," says Stover.

Myers cleans, weighs, grades and packages his eggs. He also handles promotion, which consists mainly of business cards, the Instagram hashtag #SouthernFreshFarms and word of mouth. He currently sells to friends, family, and Four Oaks Farm in Lexington. Eventually, he'd like to expand his operation to 5,000 chickens.

Ron Berry, another Pelion High senior, also runs his own agribusiness. Last spring, he used money from his savings account to start Spring Branch Farms, a catfish operation. He already had access to a pond and a cage for containment. Those two factors meant more manageable startup costs.

Berry also took the same advice Stover gave Myers. He started small. With little more than $500, Berry purchased additional supplies, feed and 500 fish.

In April, Berry placed the fish in the cage in his pond and waited for them to grow. The average growing season runs until the end of September, but as Berry monitored his crop's progress during daily feedings, he realized his catfish were a little small. In order to produce a better crop, Berry decided to delay harvesting until November.

Ron Berry

Berry says the hardest part of raising catfish is the harvest, but it's the part he enjoys the most. "You've been waiting for six or seven months and to finally see what they look like is a good feeling," says Berry.

Once the catfish are harvested, the cleaning, weighing and packaging process begins. Berry handles all of that along with marketing and sales. He mainly sells to family and friends, but also lists his products on-line. This spring, Berry wants to increase his growing area and add more cages to accommodate 2,000 catfish.

Berry and Myers both plan to attend Piedmont Technical College in the fall where they will pursue a degree in diversified agriculture. Berry hopes to eventually attend Clemson University.

When Myers and Berry graduate in June, they will leave Lexington One well prepared for their future. Frank Stover agrees. "Both students are extremely hard workers. They possess the integrity and self-motivation needed to be successful entrepreneurs."
